

Writing

Katherine Quinn

Writing, like any other art isn't just work. It isn't just a homework assignment. It's more than that. Writing is more than a hobby. Writing is a boring story brought to life like a black and white picture suddenly filled with vibrant colors or just a simple sketch brought to life with animation. Like a dancer spinning and jumping or a paintbrush gliding and twirling across the page. Like a multi-colored ribbon whirling and spinning in the air like a graceful rainbow. Like water rushing by in a stream, leaping over rocks and pebbles, calling out to you with a gurgle. A pen touching paper, craving the surge from the hand that means, "GO!" Racing across the paper, forming letters that turn into words that create a story trailing behind the pen trying to form this brilliant idea into print as fast as it can, like a race car speeding down the track. An exhilarating, glorious feeling spreads through your body like the golden warmth of sunshine as you scribble out your last sentence, seeing the racecar speed through the checkered flag and do a gradual and pompous victory lap. As you reflect back on your work with a new satisfying feeling of pleasure a rewarding tingle flows all the way to your fingertips urging you to begin again.
